out, one of them is missing a shoe. The uniform is still on. "Oh my god!" I squeak, and Nolan holds me up by the shoulders. We stare at the bloody scene. I feel numb. I want to cry, but I can't. My mind is racing. I stumble a little as I take a step closer. Nolan pulls me back. "Alicia, don't go any closer! They're still here, but—" A bloodied shape comes running down the hall. We see a dark-haired girl, on her knees and wiping her hands on her shorts. She gasps as she sees us, then looks up at Nolan and draws herself up. "It's bad," she says, between gasps for air. "There's three of them and they came in here—we tried to fight them off but I think... I think one got away." Nolan holds my hand tightly. He doesn't let go, even when we enter the living room. I see it in his eyes, his face. Fear. I'm scared, too. I don't know what's going to happen. But I know it's not going to be good. # Much Later I'm in bed. Nolan's not home yet. It's been two weeks since the murders. The victim's parents are staying at the motel until they can move back to their home in Atlanta. I close my eyes and think of the girl. I never got to meet her, so that was a huge loss. I think of the other two victims. I know what happened to them, because Nolan told me, but it still hurts. My eyes pop open. My face is cold. I sit up in bed, frozen with fear. I see Nolan's eyes. He's not just looking at me; he's staring at my mouth. It's like he wants to kiss me. I want him to kiss me, but my legs feel weak and I know I'm not ready. I want him to know it's not that I'm trying to hide it from him, that I'm not trying to hurt him, but I just can't do it now. I'm not ready. I just... I don't know.
